DESCRIPTION of NEW-ORLEANS.

NEW-ORLEANS has become of so much importance by its transfer to the United States and by being the resort of so many adventurers from the Atlantic coast, that we may naturally feel some curiosity respecting its real condition.

The following account of that city was drawn up by one who resided a considerable time within its precincts, before it passed under its present governors, and may afford no small instruction to those who have any thoughts of emigrating thither, or who are desirous of knowing something of a place lately so much talked of.

New-Orleans is situated on the eastern shore of the Mississippi, in north latitude 29, 57, and in west longitude 99, 14, from Greenwich. It stands on a kind of peninsula, and, though apparently belonging to West Florida, does in fact form a part of Louisiana, of which it is the capital. It is laid out on Penn's plan, with the streets crossing each other at right angles; and contains fifteen rows of streets, from N. E. to S. W. and seven rows in the opposite direction. It lies about 105 miles from the Gulf of Mexico, following the course of the river; but across the country by land it is not more than twenty-one miles. The number of houses may be about a thousand, and the area of the city about three hundred acres, the whole of which, however, is not built over, as many of the squares at the N. W. end are entirely void of houses. The principal buildings are as near the river as the plan of the town will admit; and houses situated near this spot are of more value than those situated farther back from the Mississippi. Fronting the river, and at an equal distance from each end of the town, there is a public square, left open as well for the purpose of beauty and ornament, as to expose to view a church, which stands at the farther end of it. This church is a plain brick building of the Ionic order, and is the best edifice in the place. The other buildings are, the government houses, the magazines of stores, the barracks, and the convent; the latter contains thirty or forty nuns; they are all very plain buildings, and attract no particular attention.

The whole of the city, except the side near the river, is defended by a fortification, consisting of five bastions regularly laid out, and furnished with a banquette, rampart, parapet ditch, covert way and glacis; the curtains are nothing more than a line of palisades about four feet high, which are set at a small distance from each other and consequently penetrable by musket ball; these palisades are furnished with a banquette within, and a trifling ditch and glacis without. In the middle of each curtain there is a small redoubt or ravelin. The bastions have each sixteen embrasures, viz: four in each face, three in each flank, and two in the gorge to face the city. However, the whole of the works are very ill supplied with cannon, which I found arose from real scarcity; and by late accounts from this place it appears, that these defects have not yet been remedied. There were but two of the bastions that mounted more than four or five pieces of cannon. The eastern bastion, however, which defends the lower end of the city, had its full complement, besides the same number in the covert-way. The reason of this precautionary measure I was unable to ascertain; for they could hardly apprehend an attack from below, as the river is well defended about eighteen miles farther down, and no nation would think of attacking it against the stream, which is exceedingly rapid. The only places which defended the town from above were the S. W. bastion, and a small redoubt on the bank of the river. This bastion was supplied with about twelve pieces of cannon, and was furnished besides with a counter-guard and traverses; the redoubt had five pieces of cannon mounted. But of all this force, not above ten pieces could be brought to bear upon any body of men coming down the river; and if they once effected a landing on the open banks, which would be no difficult thing, as they are almost defenceless, the bastions would be of no farther service. The fortification of this place is not much security against even a few well disciplined troops led on by a skillful commander possessing a good local knowledge of the country: the number of Spanish soldiers kept up here is very trifling; so much so, that the inhabitants of the place are obliged to perform garrison duty, an office of which they complain bitterly. In fact, a spirit of disaffection appeared to run through the whole town, and they seemed ready to favor any attempts that were likely to relieve them from the Spanish yoke.

There are two gates, the two most considerable of which are near the river; the next in importance are the two to the back of the town, one of which leads to lake Pontchartrain; these last are defended by a small breast work, which, however, is a mere apology for a defence. The gates are of wood, and formed of palisades about ten or twelve feet high. They are shut every night at nine o'clock, after which time they are not opened without much difficulty; and at this hour it is ordered that no one is to be seen about the streets, unless permission of the governor; though, except in the case of negroes and servants, the hour is generally extended to eleven, after which time all persons seen about the streets are stopped by the guard, and detained till morning.

The Mississippi, being subject to an annual overflow, like the Nile, is kept within its proper bed by a mound of earth thrown up along shore; this is called the Levee, and varies in height according to the surface of the adjoining country, from two to three and even four feet. It commences at Doctor des Anglois, eighteen miles below New-Orleans, and is carried along the river as far as the German settlements, more than thirty miles above, making in the whole about fifty miles. This bank is of considerable width in some places, so far as to form a handsome broad walk, and is kept up by the owners of the adjoining plantations, who are answerable for any damage sustained by the breaking down of the bank, if through their neglect. As all this country is very low and flat, and consequently liable to be overflowed, these levees are often continued round the whole plantation; so that the inundation, the surface of the surrounding water is considerably above the bed within it. This was the case when I was in New-Orleans, and the whole of the city was considerably below the level of the river's surface. The levee, which forms the boundary here, is a handsome raised gravel walk, planted with orange trees, and serves as a place of fashionable resort on a summer's evening. I have often enjoyed this promenade, admiring the serenity of the climate, and the majestic appearance of this noble river, which seemed to roll along in silent dignity at our feet, inattentive to the busy scene that was passing on its shores.

The houses are mostly of wood and are raised about seven or eight feet from the earth, to make room for the cellars, which are on a level with the ground: for no building can be carried below its surface, on account of the height of the surrounding water. The upper part is sometimes furnished with an open gallery, which surrounds the building, a practice very common in warm countries.

In all societies where a number of people from different countries have met together, every one will naturally persevere in those habits to which he has been accustomed in his own country, and altho' a miscellaneous intercourse may induce many men to relax a little, yet it will be long before they form a general character. The residents here are, English, Irish, Scotch, American, French and Spanish; and though the four former constitute by far the greatest body of the people, yet the two latter form a distinct division, of which the Spanish is the least considerable. The characteristics of these nations are nearly the same as in the mother country, though somewhat altered by that natural progress of assimilation already hinted at.

The climate too may have some influence, and induce them to make some little deviation from usage, for the sake of ease & comfort, among the most baneful effects of which we may reckon the unconquerable disposition towards idleness so prevalent in warm countries. Nevertheless they are neat and cleanly in their houses and furniture, which however is a virtue of necessity rather than of inclination.

There is but one printing-press in this city, and that is for the use of the government only. The Spaniards are too jealous to suffer the inhabitants to have the free exercise of it; and strange as it may appear, you cannot stick a paper against the wall, either to recover a thing lost, or to advertise a thing for sale, unless it has the signature of the governor or his secretary.

The diversions of the place consist principally in billiards, of which there are several tables.

They have a play house, which is rather small, it consists of one row of boxes only with a pit and gallery. The plays are in French, and they have a tolerable set of actors. The inhabitants are musical; and gentlemen often perform in the orchestra in the theatre, in fact they have no music public or private, but such as is obtained in this voluntary way.

It is not in young colonies that we are to look for much improvement in arts and sciences: It will be sufficient if they preserve those which they bring from the mother country, and do not degenerate too rapidly. Emigrants to such places are generally men of a speculative and enterprising turn; the connections which they form among each other are mostly for the sake of interest or immediate pleasure, and lose much of their relish for want of that tie which is found to be the only true bond of society.

The climate during summer is tolerably hot; for a few days whilst I was there, in June the thermometer stood at 117° in the shade!—It is deemed a very unhealthy place, which may probably be owing to its low situation; for there is scarcely a hill to be seen for many miles together; besides the interior is full of swamps and woods; all the cultivated parts are in the immediate vicinity of the rivers.

The observance of the sabbath is as loose and irreligious as in any other Roman catholic country. The morning is kept in the performance of a few forms and ceremonies under the roof of the church.—This being ended, and with the duty of the day, you every where observe the marks of hilarity and cheerfulness; scarcely has the priest pronounced his benediction, ere the fiddle or fife strike us at the door, and the lower classes indulge themselves in juvenile diversion; singing, dancing, and all kinds of sports are seen in every street; and in the evening, to crown this scene of dissipation, the playhouse and assembly room are thrown open.

This unbending of the mind from all worldly concerns, and suffering the gay dispositions of the heart to bear sway, took very much with the lower sort of people.

The trade of New Orleans consists principally in the exportation of deer skins, beaver furs, cotton, lumber, rice, and various other articles that are produced on the plantations up the river. The skins and furs are obtained from the Indians, who are continually bringing them down to this place, where they barter them for rifle guns, powder, blankets, &c. The imports are chiefly West India produce, and such European manufactures as are most in demand among the inhabitants, or intended for the traders among the Indians. This latter is very profitable. There was a gentleman at this time at New Orleans who had followed it for some years; he was then preparing for another expedition, and I proceeded with him about three hundred miles on his way to the province of Mexico.

He told me, that though it was a life of extreme fatigue and much danger, yet it was difficult to be procured, as the Spanish governors were very jealous in admitting any one to this privilege; and it would be impossible to carry it on without their permission.

His method of conveying such articles as he took out to them, was in little barrels placed upon pack horses, three barrels on one horse; and in this manner he would travel for hundreds, I may say thousands of miles, through the woods of America, bartering with the Indians as he went along, & receiving from them skins and furs, wild horses, &c. which are all sent down to N. Orleans.

Most of the exports above mentioned are the produce of the plantations within two or three hundred miles of New-Orleans: but flour, one of the most considerable, with a small quantity of hemp, tobacco, &c. is the produce of the American settlements on the Ohio, more than two thousand miles above New-Orleans! These articles are put on board a kind of boat, or rather raft, which is so where to be found but on these rivers; they are flat bottomed, about twelve feet wide, and forty feet long, and carry from ten to fifty tons; they are made of the coarsest materials, because they are always broken up and sold when they arrive at New Orleans, it being impossible for them to return against the stream. Early in the spring these boats are loaded, and floating night and day; they are soon carried by the force of the stream at the rate of five miles an hour, through a highly romantic country, down to the Mississippi, where they arrive about the time that the inundations commence. In this river, the navigation of which is dangerous on account of the rapidity of the current, and the numerous logs that lie concealed just below the surface of the water, the boatmen are obliged to proceed with caution, and it is near a month or five weeks before the voyage is completed; a voyage where you are secluded from all society of man, except in a savage state; but where the eye is relieved by a continual change of the most delightful and picturesque scenery, and some of the grandest and most sublime views of nature.

CHARLESTON, September 7.
Died, at his house in this city, on Wednesday last, in the 82d year of his age, the venerable and highly respectable general Christopher Gadsden.
The long and meritorious services of his most venerable and lamented citizen are too well known to his countrymen to require a lengthy recital of them; heretofore it is to say, that he is one of the earliest patriots of Carolina, and the revolution, that as a soldier in the field, as a statesman in our councils, and in the private walks of the citizen, his whole life was devoted to the service of his country.
As early as the year one thousand seven hundred and sixty five, he was appointed a delegate to meet delegates, from the other parts of the continent, at New York, to consult on measures to ward off the dangers that then threatened America. The obnoxious acts of the British parliament then complained of were soon after repealed.
A few years after when oppression again made its appearance, and it was found necessary to oppose it by arms, general Gadsden early appeared by his writings and example, to animate his countrymen to join in the righteous cause. Throughout the arduous conflict he shared in all their dangers and difficulties. When this city was compelled to surrender to the superior arms of the enemy, in the year one thousand seven hundred and eighty, he became a prisoner; but so much was his influence dreaded by them, that instead of permitting him to enjoy the terms of the capitulation he was seized, with several valuable and enterprising citizens, and sent to St. Augustine, where he underwent a rigorous & close confinement. On the return of peace he was restored to his country. He was immediately called to her councils, and for a number of years represented this city in the legislature. He was constantly re-elected to his trust, until finding the infirmities of age approaching, and beholding his country happy in the government of her choice he chose to retire from all public business.

The Important Intelligence Of peace with Tripoli, and freedom to her late American captives, is completely confirmed by the following article: but expected, as it appears, by different, and rather less pleasing measures than those heretofore stated by the arrival at Salem.
But although it proves that our spiritual and enterprising countryman, General Benton, was not the negotiator for the desirable achievements in question, still it is more probable that his glorious and splendid operations in the interior of the country, softened down the inflexibility of the hostile Bashaw into something like moderation, and, no doubt, produced his precipi-tancy of compliance with the terms of peace.
[Balt. Amer.]
MALTA, June 26, 1805.
Our differences with Tripoli, have at length been completely and in my mind honourably settled, through commodore Rodgers and colonel Lear, and it has been done without firing a single shot at the city.
The terms on which the peace has been concluded, will be made known to you through the proper department. The outlines I will here state: first an exchange of prisoners was agreed upon, so far as they went, say 80. For the remaining 213 we paid 60,000 dollars; without consular presente, annual tribute, or any other consideration. All the American prisoners were released previous to the signing of the treaty, or a compliance on our part with any of the stipulations—which evidently shows how anxious the Bashaw was to end this very unprofitable contest he had been so long engaged in with the Americans.— The Tripolitan prisoners were not delivered to the Bashaw until the frigate Constitution had left Tripoli with the Americans, arrived at Syracuse, received on board the Tripolitans, and returned to Tripoli; and all this was done in 12 days.” From the Isle of France.

April 12.—“You have heard of the capture and condemnation of the Penman; it is only necessary therefore for me to add a few particulars of the unfortunate termination of our voyage:
We left Batavia with a cargo of sugars and spices for Muscat; before getting out of the Streights, captain Coffin and five men were taken sick; upon which it was judged prudent to order the ship for the Isle of France, to procure men and medical assistance. When in sight of our port we were taken by the British ship Tremendous and sent to Ceylon, where our ship, cargo, and private adventures, were condemned. The reasons assigned were: that we were on an illegal voyage, that is, going from Flushing to Batavia, and thence to Muscat. The judge further said that going from an enemy's colony to a neutral country, where she did not belong, was likewise illegal. But the fact was, the ship was a valuable and tempting prize to British cupidity. On our return to this place, we received from captain Dixon, and Mr. Van Harten, supercargo of the Columbia of Philadelphia, every mark of attention which could be dictated by hearts of generosity and honor—Their goodness I shall never forget.”

COMMUNICATION.
The recent expedient resorted to by a foreign minister, in obtaining the opinion of able jurists of the country to which he is sent, upon the merits of a political controversy existing between his own and that nation, for the purpose of influencing the adjustment of it, is a novelty in diplomatic history.
The philanthropist might be led to rejoice at the example, as leading to the introduction of a more satisfactory and less sanguinary mean of settling national differences, than has usually obtained. But the statesman will feel alarmed at the mischiefs which might result to his country from such a practice, when the opinion is taken upon an exparte statement, to perplex ne-gociation, and procrastinate accommodation.
Whether such were the objects in the present instance, or not, might be reasonably inferred and determined from the manner in which the case was stated, and the opinion procured.
But, such an enquiry is rendered unnecessary for Americans to make on the present occasion; as the incorrectness of the opinion given, is capable of being made manifest, even to those who have erred in the formation of it.
In the opinion adverted to, two grounds are taken for its support—that to maintain the claim against A, would be to require the performance of an impossibility by that power, which nations are not any more than individuals bound to perform; and that the release by B to C of B's right to indemnity from C, operates a release to A. So that if a suit were instituted by B against A, these counsel for A would 1st. Demur to B's claim as predicated on the face of it, upon the exaction of an impossibility to have been performed by B.
2d. Plead a release of B's claim against A.
To support the demurrer, the cases of a promise to go to Rome in three days; and that a man in London shall cover a house in Hampshire, while he is in London, would be cited. True, these are impossibilities; therefore, the party who accepts of such a promise, knows at the time the folly of requiring the performance of them, because they are physical impossibilities—but if a man not worth a cent, give his promissory note for the payment of a thousand dollars immediately, is not this also promising to perform an impossibility?
And yet this promise is good, because it is not a physical but a moral impossibility.
Now, was it a physical or moral impossibility which A was required to perform?
Surely a moral one only—as in the case of the poor man giving his note; the thing stipulated by him to be done was not in its nature impossible, if he had money enough to pay the same. So the preventing of C from making a convenience of A's territory for C's unlawful purposes, was not an act in its nature impossible, and which is insisted upon should have been prevented —but at most, as in the first case, the poor man cannot perform his promise, because it is impossible for him to raise the money —so in the latter case, A could not prevent the trespass of C, because it was impossible for A to raise sailors and courage enough to do it.

With respect to the plea; if the case had been, that A and C had jointly contracted to pay B a sum of money, there is no doubt but that the plea would be main-tainable, because B by releasing C from the contract, and upon that destroyed contract it was that A was made responsible to B.
The release of one would have operated a release to the other.
But the injury for which redress was sought by B, was a tort for which C became responsible to B, not on a contract jointly with A, but for a trespass committed independently of A; and for which A also became responsible, not on a contract jointly with C, but for a distinct tortious act against B, (from that committed by C,) in permitting C, to condemn and sell in the ports of A. Now if two persons commit a trespass jointly, it will not be contended that, the release of one will be pleadable in bar by the other, because each trespasser is liable for the whole damage, and is separately contemplated by law as guilty of a distinct act, as relates to himself; and therefore, although the injured person may not prosecute, or may absolutely discharge one trespasser, yet the omission of one of the trespassers in a suit, or having given a discharge to the one not included, will not bar the remedy against the other co-trespasser.
